

Personal Statement

I have always found managerial skills to be one of the most fundamental yet challenging skills to acquire, especially in an ever-changing society like Hong Kong. I aspire to work with, or even become, the best of minds; and management is exactly the pinnacle of all the fields.

I am a calm, flexible and positive person. With a belief of " Nothing could bring me down" when facing dangers or dilemmas, I was not acting the same with an ordinary person that always finding ways to escape from the trauma; instead, I was so excited to think of solutions to tackle the problems. I believe that I could learn more after I overcame one or more diversities.

While knowledge and experience are quintessential, they are at most auxiliary. I value hands-on experience the most. Since then, I started to look for jobs that are related to management, which I have been long pursued. I started working at The Butchers Club Burger as a waitress from April 2016 and have been promoted to become the Restaurant's Supervisor after 3-month working. I was first introduced to this part-time position, just like many other graduates from secondary school. Nonetheless, I worked hard, as though I were a full-time employee, which I think set me apart from my fellow colleagues or waitresses.

It is my honor to have my hard-working performance to be seen by my restaurant manager, Colby. Recently, I have been promoted again to be a part-time Supervisor in our flagship shop, where is located in Wanchai. I reckon the main reason of these promotions, under the situation that I am the only supervisor that working in a part-time format, is because my work ethics set me apart from my peers. Once I took responsibility or an initiative, my heart is in it.

Nevertheless, I am a well-organized person. Some people had wondered how could I handle both academics and my part time job. Since I can manage my schedule well, I am confident that by working night shift at the restaurant, I can spare myself sufficient daytime for academics. After all, it is unproductive for me to study all the time, from day to night, and going to work would rightly serve as a break for me.

Except for my working experience, I have also learned a lot from my extra-curricular activities. Learning management could not be only about making money, but also giving back to the society. Through participating in different social service, for instance, assisting people who are physically disabled got access to the medical service, organizing funfair activities with visually impaired children, I was pleased to have such opportunities to know more about the social issues from different perspectives and better understand people's diversities.

I believed these experience had laid a solid basis for further studies and the final entry into my chosen career. Once again, I believe university is a place to make me become a pinnacle of all walks of life, challenging, cultivating me to be a better person.
